Employee Review Rating Rubric - Route Leaders

A 3 is a good, normal rating. A rating of 3 means you are meeting the expectations of your position.

1 = Seriously below expectations 2 = Needs improvement 3 = Meets expectations 4 = Exceeds expectations 5 = Exceptional

Category	1 - Seriously Below Expectations	2 - Needs Improvement	3 - Meets Expectations	4 - Exceeds Expectations	5 - Exceptional
Work Quality	Regularly allows poor-quality work to leave properties unfinished or uncorrected. Does not adequately check their own work or the crew's work, resulting in frequent missed areas, callbacks, damage, or rework.	Can produce acceptable work personally, but does not consistently maintain quality across the crew. Important details are sometimes missed, and properties may need additional checking or correction from management.	Consistently maintains acceptable professional quality across the route. Produces good work personally, checks the crew's work when needed, catches obvious problems before leaving, and makes sure properties are completed to company standards.	Maintains very strong quality across the entire crew with little management oversight. Regularly catches small problems before leaving, keeps employees accountable for their work, and rarely allows work to require correction afterward.	Sets the standard for quality leadership. Consistently produces and demands exceptional finished work, develops better quality habits in the crew, catches problems others miss, and can be trusted to maintain company standards without management checking behind the route.
Productivity	Frequently fails to keep the route moving. Poor organization, weak direction, wasted time, or failure to address slowdowns causes the crew to fall significantly behind.	Sometimes keeps the route on pace, but struggles to consistently organize the crew, recognize delays, or make adjustments when production falls behind.	Keeps the crew working at an acceptable pace and generally completes the expected route workload. Organizes employees effectively, recognizes when the crew is falling behind, and makes reasonable adjustments to keep production moving without sacrificing quality.	Consistently runs an efficient route. Minimizes wasted time, positions employees effectively, recognizes bottlenecks early, and regularly helps the crew produce more than normally expected while maintaining quality.	Sets the standard for route efficiency. Consistently gets exceptional production from the crew without sacrificing quality, makes excellent decisions about labor and workflow, and noticeably improves the productivity of employees working under them.
Reliability	Cannot consistently be depended on to be present, on time, prepared, or capable of taking responsibility for the route. Attendance, punctuality, communication, or follow-through creates serious operational problems.	Has recurring punctuality, attendance, preparation, communication, or follow-through issues that make management uncertain whether they can consistently depend on them to lead the route.	Can be depended on to show up on time and prepared, take responsibility for the assigned route, communicate important issues, and follow through on responsibilities without management having to constantly monitor them.	Highly dependable. Rarely creates scheduling or operational uncertainty, communicates problems early, follows through consistently, and can be trusted to keep the route functioning properly when unexpected issues arise.	One of the people the company can depend on most. Sets the standard for preparation, communication, attendance, and follow-through and can be trusted to take control and keep operations moving even during unusually difficult situations.
Teamwork / Cooperation	Creates conflict, communicates poorly, refuses reasonable direction, treats employees unfairly, or manages the crew in a way that significantly hurts teamwork and production.	Works with the crew but struggles to consistently communicate, coordinate employees, resolve minor conflicts, or get cooperation from the team.	Works well with the crew while also providing leadership. Communicates expectations, gives reasonable direction, helps employees when necessary, keeps the crew coordinated, and maintains a productive working environment.	Consistently makes the crew work better together. Communicates clearly, recognizes when someone needs help, handles disagreements appropriately, keeps employees engaged, and improves cooperation without requiring management intervention.	Sets the standard for team leadership. Builds a crew that communicates, cooperates, and performs well together. Earns respect while maintaining authority, develops stronger teamwork in others, and makes employees around them more effective.
Professional Conduct	Regularly demonstrates unacceptable attitude, disrespect, poor judgment, inappropriate customer behavior, or other conduct that reflects badly on the company or undermines their authority as a leader.	Generally behaves appropriately but has recurring problems with attitude, communication, maturity, handling frustration, or representing the company professionally.	Consistently behaves professionally as a representative of the company and as the person responsible for the crew. Treats customers and employees respectfully, handles normal frustration appropriately, and communicates disagreements or problems in a mature way.	Maintains professionalism even during stressful situations, difficult customers, employee problems, mistakes, or disagreements. Sets a strong example for the crew and represents the company very well.	Sets the professional standard for others. Demonstrates exceptional judgment, maturity, composure, and communication and is someone employees can look to for how a company representative and leader should behave.
Responsibility / Initiative	Avoids ownership, requires constant management direction, fails to address obvious problems, or regularly leaves important route responsibilities for someone else to handle.	Handles basic assigned responsibilities but frequently needs prompting from management to recognize problems, make decisions, follow through, or take ownership of the route.	Takes ownership of the route and handles normal responsibilities without needing constant direction. Notices routine problems, makes reasonable decisions, protects equipment and property, communicates issues appropriately, and makes sure necessary work gets done.	Regularly anticipates what the route or crew will need before being told. Solves problems independently, takes strong ownership of results, prevents avoidable issues, and follows problems through until they are resolved.	Operates with an exceptional level of ownership. Anticipates problems before they affect the route, makes consistently strong independent decisions, improves how work is handled, and develops greater responsibility and initiative in the employees they lead.
Coachability	Resists correction, argues against reasonable feedback, repeatedly ignores instruction, or fails to change behavior after problems have been addressed.	Listens to feedback but does not consistently apply it. The same leadership or work issues frequently require repeated correction.	Accepts feedback professionally, makes reasonable changes when corrected, and applies management direction to both their own work and the way they lead the crew.	Actively uses feedback to improve. Makes noticeable and lasting adjustments, learns from mistakes, and rarely needs the same correction repeatedly.	Sets the standard for growth and improvement. Seeks useful feedback, applies it quickly and permanently, accurately evaluates their own performance, and turns what they learn into better leadership and better performance from the crew.
